In the War Cabinet, Churchill is advised to make peace with Hitler before the entire army is lost. He resists, and orders the evacuation to proceed. The only way the Army can make it to the coast is by holding open a corridor, down which to retreat. Alf Tombs is in one of the units charged with this task. Although they successfully resist the German advance for 48 hours, allowing thousands to escape, it ends in their own capture. Meanwhile, Churchill faces down the threat of a split within the Cabinet, in order to allow the evacuation to continue. On the beaches, Captain Tennant, the man in charge of the operation on the ground, discovers he can evacuate men more quickly from a flimsy wooden pier. But as the weather changes, the pier and the beaches are heavily attacked by the Luftwaffe, resulting in heavy losses of both men and ships. (Repeats 2/5 at 3:00am)

10:00 PM DUNKIRK: EVACUATION
The Army has now made its way back to the coast, but there are far too many men to evacuate in the time that is left before the Germans are expected to take Dunkirk. More boats are needed so the Admiralty begins to requisition a fleet of small craft including cockle fishing boats from Leigh-on-Sea. The crew of The Renown decide they will sail their boat themselves. Meanwhile fleets of naval ships are continuing to lift as many men as they can from the beaches and the pier. The French, who until now have been kept in the dark about plans for a full scale British evacuation, learn that their allies are leaving them. In order to allow the Anglo-French alliance to continue, Churchill orders that French troops be lifted 50/50 with the English, doubling the number of men to be evacuated in a single stroke. The Leigh boys, who set out knowing little of what to expect, find themselves sailing into a scene of desperation and mayhem, but in spite of the dangers they begin to lift men off the beaches. When the tide makes their work there impossible, they too begin to lift men off the pier. As the strain on the little boat begins to tell the engine fails. Under tow on their way home they hit a mine and are killed. They are among the first civilian casualties of the war. Their community mourns, realising the cost of the successful evacuation, and the country is left to face the threat of invasion. (Repeats 2/12 at 3:00am)

9:00 PM THE GREELY EXPEDITION: AMERICAN EXPERIENCE
In 1881, 25 men led by Lieutenant Adolphus Greely sailed from the harbor of St. John's, Newfoundland. Their destination was Lady Franklin Bay in the high Arctic, where they planned to collect a wealth of scientific data from a vast area of the world's surface that had been described by a British admiral as a "sheer blank." Three years later, only six survivors returned, with a daunting story of shipwreck, starvation, mutiny and cannibalism. "The Greely Expedition," from producer Rob Rapley (Wyatt Earp), tells a harrowing tale of one of the great scientific adventures of all time. Drawing on a documentary record that includes scientific accounts, diaries, photographs and letters, the film reveals the nearly unbearable pressures experienced by the members of the expedition, and shows how poor planning, personality clashes, questionable decisions and pure bad luck conspired to turn a noble scientific mission into a human tragedy. Dunkirk has now become a siege town. While a large number of the Army has been evacuated, many tens of thousands still remain. Whether or not they survive depends on how long men like Lieutenant Jimmy Langley can hold back the final German advance. Fierce fighting buys time for the men to get away but Lt Jimmy Langley is injured and taken to a casualty station where Major Newman has been trying to evacuate his wounded patients. His repeated efforts are frustrated and no hospital ships arrive. The evacuation slows to a snail's pace as daylight sailing is suspended and the crews of the naval ships, who have been working for nine days without rest, are exhausted. When finally the British Expeditionary Force is evacuated, further political pressure requires these crews to make one more trip in order to lift as many of the French rearguard as possible. However, no provision can be made for the wounded and Major Newman and Jimmy Langley are left behind to face the Germans who arrive in Dunkirk on the same day as Churchill makes his now famous speech to the House of Commons vowing never to surrender. He learns how she was born in 1890 in Torquay, England and how out of her idyllic childhood in Devon she grew to become master of the sinister world of poisons and murder. From the pastoral ideal of the British country house to the exotic mysteries of the East, her vivid construction of character and place combine to captivate readers by the millions. Suchet learns that it is not just Christie's novels that are shrouded in mystery. He investigates the adultery of her husband. A betrayal that led to her bizarre disappearance in 1926 when she faked her own death and convinced the nation she had succumbed to the same horrendous fate as the victims in her novels. Suchet explores the close links between Christie's extraordinary life and her work and discovers just what it is about this late Victorian woman from Torquay that allowed her to become the bestselling murder mystery writer in history -- a popularity that continues up to the present.
